The aim of the event was to gather delegations from EU member states participating in this Annual Meeting of the European Charter of Rural Communities, at the municipality of Nadur and to discuss the official theme of the meeting. The group was divided into smaller groups to discuss different topics, after which presentations were made followed by further generic discussions. The workshops were held separately for Adults (30+) and Youths (18-30 years old) in order to be able to discuss the theme from a different perspective. The organisers also ensured that the discussions are held in small groups, and different topics were discussed. The theme related to "Solidarity. Realisation of the idea of solidarity in times of crisis. Responsibility in the context of common challenges faced by Europe" and following pre-discussions with the experts, the organising team selected four topics to be discussed during the workshops: Demographic Challenges and Brain Drain, Economic Growth and Divide, Participation and Citizenship, as well as Migration and Extremism/Populism. Topics were discussed by different small, international groups during the workshops, all in relation to Solidarity and Tolerance. All delegates were advised in advance about the topic they will be discussing to ensure preparedness, and the organising team ensured that participants of same delegations discuss all topics. The moderator for the Adult discussions was Professor Andrew Azzopardi – Dean of the Faculty of Social Wellbeing at the University of Malta, while the Youth Discussions were led by Mr. Joseph Bruno Vella – an expert in European Public Policy and Public Policy and Management and works as Chief of Staff at one of the Government Ministries. The aims of the workshops were to have a mixture of ideas and views, discuss the current situation in the different countries and rural towns, assess how the problems and realities are affecting people and towns, and to discuss how the EU may come up with solutions. The discussions were very fruitful and went into detail especially from a rural town perspective, solidarity was given as the main answer to current European challenges. International dialogue, exchange of experiences and opinions during the debate led to increase of the mutual understanding between members of European Charter of Rural Communities.
